ABOUT THE BOOK

In a bid to contribute to the literature on global issues in the 21st Century, this book was envisaged. We expect that the book would rather not raise a panic alarm but would remain a valuable reference compendium to help promote individual and global efforts toward achieving sustainable agricultural development, a habitable global environment, and an economically viable global economy that would support human existence. Thus, the strategic focus of this book includes the need to support a collective effort in fighting global agricultural and environmental issues, and economic challenges now and in the future. To achieve this aim, it is important to enhance environmental sustainability to support improved ecosystem services through sustainable use of natural/environmental resources, adoption of sustainable agricultural practices, and ensuring sustained suitable economic policies.

The book contains articles that address various issues in different countries, mainly in various aspects related to agriculture, poverty, the impact of crude oil drilling, urban development, religion and insecurity, female education, climate change, and general economic issues. The book is intended for a wider scope of readers across the globe and will be suitable for students, researchers, and policymakers in various sectors of the economy especially those interested in the field of agriculture, economic development, and the environment.

However, each contribution is as self-contained as possible. Efforts have been made to see that the articles enhance rather than depend on others in the book. Generally, the book is divided into 13 Chapters.
